Celebrate the diverse musical traditions of these emerging female artists in Canada.

Juno Award winner Kiran Ahluwalia is a bridge to a colourful past. Taught by ancient masters in India, she sings Punjabi folk songs and poetic Indian ghazals that are over seven hundred years old. As a composer, she is also committed to preserving and reinventing the ghazal tradition as a contemporary art form.

Ndidi Onukwulu is a blues singer with a voice you'll never forget. Whether she's holding a low melancholy note or chasing a high one, Ndidi will remind you why the blues transcend the pain and sorrow of life.

Tanya Tagaq Gillis is a groundbreaking Inuk artist who's bringing the unusual and universally appealing tradition of Inuit throat singing to new audiences. Tanya has toured with some of the world's leading global artists and collaborated with the Kronos Quartet and Björk.
